NELSON WILL GIVE USUAL MAJORIT

Brent's Campaign Not Likely to Attract Votes from the Democracy.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

LOVINGSTON, VA. September 23.—

Standing upon the very spot from which in other days he has frequently appealed to the men of his native county to remain steadfast to the principles of the Democratic party, Captain Franklin Pierce Brent, Kepublican nominee for the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction, will open the campaign for his ticket here next Monday, which will be the first day of the September term of the Nelson Circuit Court. Although no announcement on the subject has been made here up to this time, it is almost certain that the Democrats will have some good speaker on hand to look after their interests, as this will be the last term of the court prior to the general election.

Captain Brent is widely known in Nelson, having been born and raised in the county. He may reasonably anticipate, therefore, a respectful hearing at the hands of his Democratic friends, though when it comes to voting, few, if any, of them will scratch the regular ticket of their party named in the August primary. Nelson gave Mr. Tucker a majority of about fifty for Governor over Judge Mann, and though the Tucker people earnestly desired the nomination of their favorite, they will prove as loyal to the ticket as will those who supported any other candidate. Indeed, this is a rock-ribbed Democratic county, always giving majorities ranging from 250 to 490, according to the importance of the election and the turnout of the voters. Therefore, it is confidently predicted that when the November returns are in Nelson will be found to have given a safe majority for the properties and it looks now as if Captain George W. Whitehead, the Democratio nominee, will be returned without opposition.

Although there will be no further pourt in the county until after the

See This Great Play.

Two perfect plays in one week—as different as the poles—yet both perfect.

"A Gentleman From Mississippi" was all politics; "The Climax" is all music, and music of the best sort. One left the theatre earlier in the week in a glow; he left last night with a little lump in his throat. Not that "The Climax" is a tragedy, or even a melodrama, with an unhappy ending—it is true, there is a note of sadness for a time, a heartache with that of the girl, filled with the joy of life, of art and of music, when she loses her voice, but at the end, when it comes back to her and the curtain falls as she sings, this time from her heart, the "Song of the Soul," one chokes up only from the sheer beauty of it—of the whole idea. Edward Locke wrote the play, and a brautiful work it is, but without Joseph Brell's music much of the beauty would be lost. The whole tone, the key of the play, is set in the haunting sweetness of this incidental music. The "Song of the Soul," which permeates the play, just as the "Bable waltzes" run through "The Little Minister," to a large extent creates the atmosphere of the piece, and so to Joseph Breit great credit should be given for this very beautiful play. The stage management, too, is wellnigh perfect. There is only one set—the living room, ilbrary, studio, sewing room and kitchen of Luigi Golfanti, the teacher of the volce—but to the smallest detail it is worked out—from the grand planod down to an atomizer familiar to all with bad throats.

The story is not elaborate—it is music, music, music, music from the time the curtain rings up until the stage manager's "buzzer" sends it down on the last act. The girl, Adelina, the only woman in the four characters, is study-ing the voice with Luigi Galfanti, an old opera singer, and living in his home. Her teacher's son, Pietro, fan-she bravely overcame.

Altogether, she seemed a perfectly natural nice girl, studying her voice, and she sang like a good choir singer rather than a comic opera star.
The Pletro of Charles Howson could not well be improved upon; he was the boyish, impulsive, artistic young Italian every minute and how he can play the plano! His touch is firm, but not hard, and his modulation exquisite. One regretted that he did not have more to play, though he was at the plano many times. His efforts to straighten out a puzzling bit of harmony were as good a bit of work as any musician would care to see.
Robert Thorne, in the unsympathetic part of Dr. Raymond, made the most of the smallest character in the play, and J. M. Colville, as the old music teacher, was satisfactory in a rather trying part—he had to sustain an Italian accent throughout the performance, and, as he had many lines, he may be forgiven for occasionally aropping into plain English.
Another great play, another fine company and another small house.

The Cohans.

We are to have the whole Cohan family, including the only George M. himself, in that much-talked-about musical play, "The Yankee Prince," at the Academy Monday night. Plays from George M. Cohan's pen are very much in vogue nowadays, but when one is announced for presentation with this famous young man in the title role, surrounded by not only his family, but upwards of a hundred other clever people, it becomes an event out of the ordinary.

Louis James,

Fre-eminently one of the greatest attractions of the theatrical season will be the appearance of that sterling actor, Mr. Louis James, and a company numbering nearly fifty people in an immense revival of Shakespeare's "Henry VIII..." King of England, with Mr. James as "Cardinal Wolsey," at the Academy on Tuesday evening.

So far as the production is concerned, it is promised that, like everything else Mr. James has undertaken, the presentation, from a scenic standpoint, will be without a blemish, and far and away beyond any stage investiture of recent years. Sent sale to-day.

David Warfield, in "The Music Master,"

Next Thursday night at the Academy David Belasco will present for an engagement of four performances David Warfield, who will be seen for the first time in this city in "The Music Master," the comedy-drama that has brought the distinguished actor the most popular favor. In this play Mr. Warfield has acted in New York for five seasons. He will be supported by his original New-York Company. The prices for the Saturday matinee will be $2 to 50 cents, and the evening prices $2.50 to 75 cents. The seat sale opens Monday morning.—Adv.

Arrests for Ordinance Violations.

The Board of Police Commissioners to-day issued instructions to the police that hereafter no arrests shall be made for violations of city ordinances unless on warrants, and under the law the Mayor only can issue this class of warrants. These instructions followed a conference between the Moyor, the City Attorney, the Police Justice and the Police Commissioners, and the announcement by the Police Justice and the Police Commissioners, and the announcement by the Police Justice that in future he would try no cases in which no warrants were issued, This will simply be the observance of a law that has been in existence since 1898, but which has not been strictly adhered to as, generally speaking, the police have made many more arrests for ordinance violations without than with warrants. This order of things is to be radically changed now, and warrants must be obtained before arrests can be made.
